Substance and Alcohol Overuse

Substance use disorder occurs when a person's repeated use of drugs or alcohol interferes with their ability to be productive. This disorder can cause problems with mental and physical health. It can affect your ability to have healthy relationships, and it can keep you from being able to meet your responsibilities at work, home, or school. It can also lead to addiction, which is a condition in which the person cannot stop using the substance consistently for a period of time.

Narcotic Overuse

Opioids are drugs that are often used to treat pain. Opioids include illegal drugs, such as heroin, as well as prescription pain medicines, such as codeine, morphine, hydrocodone, and fentanyl. An opioid overdose happens when you take too much of an opioid. An overdose may be intentional or accidental and can happen with any type of opioid. The effects of an overdose can be mild, dangerous, or even deadly. Opioid overdose is a medical emergency.

What are the signs or symptoms?

Symptoms of this condition depend on the type of opioid and the amount that was taken. Common symptoms include:

- Sleepiness or difficulty waking from sleep
- Confusion
- Slurred speech
- Slowed breathing and a slow pulse
- Nausea and vomiting
- Abnormally small pupils

Signs and symptoms that require emergency treatment include:

- Cold, clammy, and pale skin
- Blue lips and fingernails
- Vomiting
- Gurgling sounds in the throat
- A pulse that is very slow or difficult to detect
- Breathing that is very irregular, slow, noisy, or difficult to detect
- Inability to respond to speech or be awakened from sleep
- Seizures
